

Rachit Agarwal, Kolkata

Protection of Life and Personal Liberty- Article 21 of the Constitution

- 2017 (8) TMI 938 - Supreme Court in Justice K.S. Puttaswamy (Retd.), and Another Versus Union Of India And Others
- Right to life and personal liberty under Article 21, privacy is not an absolute right.
- Privacy has both positive and negative content.

The negative content restrains the state from committing an intrusion upon the life and personal liberty of a citizen.

Its positive content imposes an obligation on the state to take all necessary measures to protect the privacy of the individual.